

FORCE, FORCE TO THE UTMOST

FORCE WITHOUT STINT OR LIMIT TO MAKE RIGHT.

To Redeem the World and Make It Fit for Free Men to Live in.

President Wilson last Saturday at Baltimore sent this thrilling message to the world:

Fellow Citizens: This is the anniversary of our acceptance of Germany's challenge to fight for our right to live and be free, and for the sacred rights of freedom everywhere. The nation is awake. There is no need to call to it. We know what the war must cost, our utmost sacrifice, the lives of our fittest men, and if need be, all that we possess.

The loan we are met to discuss is one of the least parts of what we are called upon to give and to do, though in itself imperative. The people of the whole country are alive to the necessity of it, and are ready to lend to the utmost, even where it involves a sharp skipping and daily sacrifice to lend out of meagre earnings. They will look with reprobation and contempt upon those who can and will not, upon those who demand a higher rate of interest, upon those who think of it as a mere commercial transaction. I have not come, therefore, to urge the loan. I have come only to give you, if I can, a more vivid conception of what it is for.

The reasons for this great war, the reason why it had to come, the need to fight it through, and the issues that hang upon its outcome, are more clearly disclosed now than ever before. It is easy to see just what this war is for, because the cause is so plain, so obvious, so stands more surely revealed than at any previous crisis of the momentous struggle. The man who knows least can not see plainly the cause of justice, and what the immortal soul is asked to invest in. Men of America may be more sure than we are that the cause is just, and that, if it should be lost, it is our great nation's place and mission in the world would be lost with it.

I call you to witness, my fellow-countrymen, that at no stage of this terrible business have I judged the purposes of Germany intemperately. I should be ashamed in the presence of affairs so grave, so fraught with the destinies of mankind throughout all the world, to speak with truculence, to use the weak language of hatred or vindictive purpose. We must judge as we would be judged. I have sought to learn the objects Germany has in this war from the mouths of her own spokesmen, and to deal as frankly with them as I wished them to deal with me. I have laid bare our own ideals, our own purposes, without reserve or doubtful phrase, and have asked them to say as plainly what it is that they seek.

We have ourselves proposed no injustice, no aggression. We are ready, whenever the final reckoning is made, to be just to the German people, deal fairly with the German power, as with all others. There can be no difference between peoples in the final judgment, if it is indeed to be a righteous judgment. To propose anything but justice, even-handed and dispassionate justice, to Germany at any time, whatever the outcome of the war, would be to renounce and dishonor our own cause, for we ask nothing that we are not willing to accord.

It has been with this thought that I have sought to learn from those who spoke for Germany whether it was justice or domination and the execution of their own will upon the other nations of the world that the German leaders were seeking. They have answered—answered in unmistakable terms. They have avowed that it was not justice, but domination and the unhindered execution of their own will. The avowal has not come from Germany's statesmen. It has come from her military leaders, who are her real rulers. Her statesmen have said that they wished peace, and were ready to discuss its terms whenever their opponents were willing to sit down at the conference table with them. Her present Chancellor has said in indefinite and uncertain terms, indeed, and in phrases that often seem to deny their own meaning, but with as much plainness as he thought prudent—that he believed that peace should be based upon the principles which we had declared would be our own in the final settlement.

At Brest-Litovsk her civilian delegates spoke in similar terms: professed their desire to conclude a fair peace and accord to the peoples with whose fortunes they were dealing the right to choose their own allegiances. But action accompanied and followed the profession. Their military masters, the men who act for Germany and exhibit her purpose in execution, proclaimed a very different conclusion. We can not mistake what they have done—in Russia, in Finland, in the Ukraine, in Rumania. The real test of their justice and fair play has come. From this we may judge the rest.

They are enjoying in Russia a cheap triumph in which no brave or gallant nation can long take pride. A great people, helpless by their own act, lies for the time at their mercy. Their law possessions are forgotten. They nowhere set up justice, but everywhere impose their power and exploit everything for their own use and aggrandizement, and the peoples of the conquered provinces are invited to be free under their domination!

Are we not justified in believing that they would do the same things at their western front if they were not face to face with armies whom even their countless divisions cannot overcome? If, when they have felt their check to be final, they should propose favorable and equitable terms with regard to Belgium and France and Italy, could they blame us if we concluded that they did so only to assure themselves of a free hand in Russia and the East? Their purpose is, undoubtedly, to make all the Slavic peoples, all the free and ambitious nations of the Baltic Peninsula, all the lands that Turkey has dominated and misruled, subject to their will and ambition, and build upon that dominion an empire of force upon which they fancy that they can then erect an empire of gain and commercial supremacy—an empire as hostile to the Americas as to the Europe which it will overawe—an empire which will ultimately master Persia, India, and the peoples of the Far East.

In such a program our ideals, the ideals of justice and humanity and liberty, the principle of the free self-determination of nations, upon which all the modern world insists, can play no part. They are rejected for the ideals of power, for the principle that the strong must rule the weak, that trade must follow the flag, whether those to whom it is taken welcome it or not, that the peoples of the world are to be made subject to the patronage and overlordship of those who have the power to enforce it.

That program once carried out, America and all who care or dare to stand with her must arm and prepare themselves to contest the mastery of the world—a mastery in which the rights of common men, the rights of women, and of all who are weak, must for the time being be trodden underfoot and disregarded, and the old, age-long struggle for freedom and right begin again at its beginning. Everything that America has lived for and loved and grown great to vindicate and bring to a glorious realization will have fallen in utter ruin and the gates of mercy once more pitilessly shut upon mankind!

The thing is preposterous and impossible; and yet is not that what the whole course and action of the German armies has meant wherever they have moved? I do not wish, even in this moment of utter disillusionment, to judge harshly or unjustly. I judge only what the German arms have accomplished with unspitting thoroughness throughout every fair region they have touched.

What, then are we to do? For myself, I am ready, ready still, ready even now, to discuss a fair and just and honest peace at any time that it is sincerely purposed—a peace in which the strong and the weak shall fare alike. But the answer, when I proposed such a peace, came from the German commanders in Russia and I cannot mistake the meaning of the answer.

I accept the challenge. I know that you accept it. All the world shall know that you accept it. It shall appear in the utter sacrifice and self-forgetfulness with which we shall give all that we love and all that we have to redeem the world and make it fit for free men like ourselves to live in. This now is the meaning of all that we do. Let everything that we henceforth plan and accomplish, ring true to this response: till the majesty and might of our concerted power shall fill the thought and utterly defeat the force of those who flout and misprize what we honor and hold dear.

Germany has once more said that force, and force alone, shall decide whether justice and peace shall reign in the affairs of men, whether right as America conceives it or domination as she conceives it shall determine the destinies of mankind. There is, therefore, but one response possible from us: Force, force to the utmost, force without stint or limit, the righteous and triumphant force which shall make right the law of the world and cast every selfish dominion down in the dust.

Dr. Granville has sent the following letter:

To Members of the Advisory Committee, Sub-Chairmen, Captains, Lieutenants, and Women Workers of the Adams County Liberty Loan Committee:

On account of the storm only a few from outside of Gettysburg could attend the Convention of Liberty Loan Volunteer Workers held Tuesday evening in the Court House. Another Convention will be held in the Court House in Gettysburg, Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, April 13. Do not fail to attend.

The instructions that will be given at this Convention will be of the greatest importance to you. You will learn how to do the work in the easiest and most efficient way. All will have an opportunity to ask questions. Those who were present at the Convention last evening went home filled with enthusiasm.

The regular house to house canvass will not commence until the first of next week so that you will have plenty of time in which to make all your preparations. Although the regular canvass has not yet commenced the people of Adams county have already subscribed over $100,000, showing their great interest in the loan. Arendtsville and Biglerville have already subscribed more than their full quota.

Enclosed please find a skeleton outline of the plan to be followed in the canvass. Next Sunday will be Liberty Loan Sunday when all the ministers of the county will be asked to preach a Liberty Loan sermon in their churches.

Confidently expecting to see you on Saturday, I am,

Yours for winning the war,
W. A. GRANVILLE,
Chairman.

DR. E. A. MILLER IN AIR RAID

WITNESSES 11TH NIGHT AIR RAID ON PARIS.

Sought Refuge in Subway of Paris Where Thousands of Others Were Gathered.

Dr. Edgar A. Miller First Lieutenant and Medical Officers' Reserve Corps, U. S. A., attached to British Expeditionary Force, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Miley Miller, writes a thrilling account to his parents of being in Paris during the eleventh air raid on that city, as follows:

Sunday, March 10, 1918. Arrived from Paris this evening, March 10. Left last night at 11:40 P. M. Traveled all night until 1 o'clock to-day. Had several stops of 1-2 to 1 hour. Travel is slow and difficult over here. Trains late, dirty, and all crowded with troops and officers of Allied armies. They stop at every station.

I got off at what I thought was my station to-day, and inquired from authorities where my regiment was. They misinformed me and I walked three miles to a village but regiment was not there. Walked back and was then told of mistake and found out regiment was 10 or 12 miles away. I finally got on a freight train and got within three miles of my village. I walked rest of way and got here just in time for dinner. Was very tired.

Regiment is in nice French village. Beautiful country, good billets and nice people. Finest quarters since I came to France. We are 10 or 12 miles back in "Reserve." We are expecting attack and are ready to leave for the front in 1-2 hour if Boche tries to break through.

Had a nice six days' leave to Paris which is just city I have ever visited. Coming from the front an war zone, Paris seemed like another world to me. One would hardly know there is a war on, by simply seeing Paris. American officers and men are there by thousands, as well as Australians, Canadians and English. Officers and men on short leave from the front. Also one sees thousands of French officers and men. Parisians seem very grateful to Americans. Many can speak English and if you ask for information on street about six volunteer to inform you. Every one says France has taken on "New Hope and Life" since America came into the war.

One only sees what a wonderful country and nation France is when you get to Paris. Where I am the country is "war stricken." All the best people seem to have gone and poorer classes remain in back areas farming and billeting troops. Near front everything is destroyed. One could easily spend several months in Paris sight seeing. Its art galleries, cathedrals, palaces, boulevards, public institutions, are world renowned. Some of the places I visited are world-renowned: Notre Dame Cathedral, Palais de Louvre, St. Germain Cathedral, Luxembourg Art Galleries, Triumphant Arch, Palace de Justice, Palace at Versailles—(former home of king and queen, built of marble and gold, where Louis XIV almost ruined a nation by his extravagance and was later made to pay his head to mob and guillotine). In the Palais de Louvre one could easily spend a week. It was begun in 1541, covers acres of ground and contains the masterpieces of Raphael, Leonardo de Vinci, Michael Angelo, Marochetti, Motez, Guichard, Mercier, and other world-renowned painters and sculptors.

Was also to the great Opera one evening, and theatres other evenings. I know the city pretty well and if I ever get back can see a great deal in short space of time.

On the last night I was there, Mar. 8th, had a great air raid on Paris by the Huns. Another American medical officer and I were walking to the theatre about 8 P. M. He remarked, "This would be a good night for a raid." We only walked a few hundred yards when the signal "to take cover" was given. This is done by powerful sirens sounded from fast driven motor cars through streets. By blowing of whistles, and ringing of bells. All taxis and motor cars began to sound their sirens and rush through streets. People began to run for shelter, few became almost frantic with fear. Was a great sight to see thousands of people making a mad rush for subway entrance.

We at once decided we better get into subway, as we knew in a few minutes all the lights would be out and city would be in darkness. Also shrapnel would soon be falling from anti-air craft defense shells, shot from defense guns which were already opening fire in sections of the city for a protective barrage.

We hastened back to subway entrance near a wonderful building, covering city block. People were rushing in by thousands. In the distance we could hear the low, dull hum of the powerful twin engines of the Hun Gotha. Barrage fire was gradually increasing and shrapnel beginning to fall about us.

The subways of Paris are one of world's great engineering feats. You can reach every section of city by subway trains, going underneath the Seine River many times. When you get into them you are practically in a city underground. All the people of Paris could get in subways and have plenty of room. They give anywhere from 25 to 100 feet of underground protection so people feel quite safe in air raids.

People underground soon began to relax from their great terror and began conversation. There were many Americans, English, French, Canadian officers and men in section where I was. Canadian Tommies began to sing and dance rag time and war songs. "I Want to Go Home," "Hello My Dearie," &c., &c. French people seemed to enjoy this very much. People were kept in subway for 3 or 4 hours before "All clear" signal was given. All the while one could faintly hear the wonderful defense guns throwing a continuous sheet of shrapnel over the city. One can easily imagine the vast amount of ammunition it takes to protect such a large city for several hours. Now and then could be heard and felt the vibration from exploding enemy bombs as they dropped on the city. Two were dropped quite close to me. I saw one hole in street about 15 feet deep and 10 feet wide where bomb struck. A taxi cab in darkness ran into it and car was standing on end.

It is estimated that about 10 or 12 squadrons or about 60 machines in all attempted to get over Paris, but only a few got through or risked barrage fire. One plane was brought down in flames. They came in waves or squadrons lasting 3 or 4 hours. Newspapers report 13 killed and 50 wounded. It may be said without exaggeration Paris bore her 11th raid like a seasoned veteran. Would be a great loss if build a like Notre Dame Cathedral, the Louvre &c., were struck, they have art and historic remains which could never be replaced.

Bombing is a terrible form of warfare. Near the front we always dread them. In the villages you feel so helpless and at the mercy of the enemy. We have all seen houses that have been struck and realize what our fate would be. I have seen men who have gone through engagements like Ypres, Verdun and the Somme shake like a leaf in an air attack.

Higher Gas Rates.

The Gettysburg Gas Company, operating in Gettysburg, Adams county, Pa., has filed with the Public Service Commission a new tariff of rates, effective May 1st, 1918, providing for the establishment of a ready-to-serve charge of 25 cents per month per meter, to be applied to all consumers.

The special rates formerly in effect for hotels, gas engines and motors, are discontinued, and the gas used for these places is to be billed under the general schedule applying to all consumers other than educational institutions, in which the unit rates range from $1.65 to $1.50 per thousand cubic feet.

Will Erect New Front to Garage.

D. J. Forney, proprietor of the National Garage, is having the old building in front of the present garage torn down preparatory to making extensive improvements to the property. The new front will be constructed of brick and for the present will be just one story. The front part will be one large room divided into automobile show room and a department for auto accessories. The back part of the room which connects with the garage will contain the office and a waiting room. Six brick pillars will decorate the front of the building and there will be an entrance drive and an exit drive on Chambersburg street.

Dr. Bender Enters Regular Army.

Dr. Maurice Bender, of New York City, son of E. M. Bender, Carlisle street, who was recently commissioned a lieutenant in the Medical Officers' Reserve Corps of the National Army, having passed the necessary examinations and been accepted. Dr. Bender has been ordered to report on July 1st at the Army Medical School in Washington, D. C. for a special course of instruction.

Thousands of miles of special wire systems have been provided for the direct use of the Government. Right of way is given to Government business over all commercial lines, and the War and Navy Departments lack no facility for keeping in constant touch with every phase of the Nation's great work.

SHOCKED THE PRINCE!

SERVANT A LITTLE TOO FAMILIAR WITH ROYAL HEIR.

Rebuked for Obsequiousness, Man Erred in the Opposite Direction—Lucky for Him Haughty Emperor Did Not Overhear.

In her book of reminiscences of the German royal family Mrs. Hugh Fraser tells the following story of the crown prince and a too obsequious menial.

His royal highness had just taken into his service a new manservant, but the overdone obsequiousness of the man jarred on his master. At last the crown prince became so irritated that the servant received an intimation to the effect that his highness would prefer to be treated with more simplicity.

The day after having given this warning the crown prince was seated at his table writing, when he suddenly felt himself tapped on the shoulder. Thinking it was his wife, he turned quickly, smiling, only to behold the hitherto obsequious servant standing beside him and regarding him with a most friendly smile. Before the astonished heir to the German throne could find suitable words in which to rebuke the servant's presumption, the latter jerked his thumb in the direction of the door, and announced:

"Pappchen has come to see you." Now, the crown prince was expecting a call from his father, the emperor, and as "Pappchen" literally means "Little Papa," his astonishment increased.

"Pappchen!" he gasped, as soon as he could articulate. Then thinking that the servant must have been drinking to speak of the emperor in such a way, he muttered to himself, while his eyes were fixed on the man in amazed inquiry: "Is he drunk?"

The servant apparently thought the whispered remark was a confidential request for information as to the prospective visitor's condition, for after scratching his head in some perplexity, he leaned closer to the crown prince and whispered softly: "Drunk? Well, I think not; I didn't notice anything."

Were in the Minority.

Three or four years ago they had in a small English town some revival meetings. A man walking around the road walked into one of these meetings without knowing in the least what it was. He saw a man preaching on the platform, sat down; not liking the people on either side of him, he went to sleep. While he was asleep the preacher wound up his sermon, saying:

"Those who are going to leave their wicked ways and come with me in the paths of righteousness, put up their hands."

All the audience put up their hands. "And those who are going to keep to their wicked ways and go to damnation, put up their hands."

The noise woke up the sleeper, and seeing a man with his hand up on the platform, so that he shouldn't be lonely he put up his hand, too, and said:

"Lor, Guvnor, I dunno what we're voting for, but we've lost it."

Acts of Heroism Recognized.

Twenty-four acts of heroism were recognized by the Carnegie hero fund commission in its fourteenth annual meeting. In seven cases silver medals were awarded. In 17 cases, bronze medals. Ten of the heroes lost their lives, and to the dependents of nine of these pensions aggregating $4,560 a year were granted. In addition to these money grants, in two cases, $2,100 was appropriated for educational purposes, payments to be made as needed and approved, and in 11 cases awards aggregating $8,000 were made for other worthy purposes. Payments in these cases will not be made until the awards have been approved by the commission.

DO IT NOW.

Gettysburg People Should Not Wait Until It Is Too Late.

The appalling death-rate from kidney disease is due largely to the fact that the little kidney troubles are usually neglected until they become serious. The slight symptoms often give place to chronic disorders and the sufferer may slip gradually into some serious form of kidney complaint.

If you suffer from backache, headaches, dizzy spells; if the kidney secretions are irregular of passage and unnatural, do not delay. Help the kidneys at once.

Doan's Kidney Pills are especially for kidney disorders—they act where others fail. Over one hundred thousand people have recommended them. Here's a case at home.

Mrs. G. Reidering, 129 Hanover St., Gettysburg, says: "About two years ago I had trouble with my kidneys. My kidneys acted irregularly and my back and head hurt me a great deal. One of my family had received such good results from Doan's Kidney Pills, I got some at the People's Drug Store. Doan's gave me lasting relief and at all times I speak highly of them."

CHEER FOR ROOKIE

Encouragement in Letters From Home Helps Fighting Men.

Officers Say Gloomy Missives Demoralize Soldiers While Bright Ones Give Will to Win.

Mother! Sweetheart! Sister! Here's a new way to "do your bit," equally as important as knitting gray wool socks for the recruits or cutting bandages for the Red Cross.

"Write a cheerful letter to your soldier."

Having its origin at Chickamauga, the South's greatest war mobilization center, this vague, for it has found favor much as the American godmother to the French soldier lad, is bounding into popular favor. It is accelerated by these advantages: it is based on facts; it strikes at an imperative need, and it achieves obvious results.

The facts are these: Fully 80 per cent of the letters received by the army man convey, instead of good cheer, a tale of petty woes and imaginary griefs.

"There's a vacant chair at the table, George."

"Poor sister's went to work to help support us since you went away."

"How we need your strong, broad shoulders to help us bear the burden."

"Mother's sick. Father's sprained his little finger and poor little Johnny's down with the measles."

These are typical dum-dum letters to boys in camp. Ninety per cent of them are better left unopened. And herefrom springs the new service.

"Shield the boy from the trifling cares and worries of home," urge the officers. "Tell him how proud you are of him, how fine you know he's doing, how happy you all are."

"Soldiers, like schoolboys, particularly the younger ones that are out in the world alone for the first time, look forward to the letters from home with eagerness," said a veteran major. "If they carry a morbid tone, he imbibes it; drinks it to the dregs, and broods. Either that, or as with some dispositions, he becomes reckless and careless."

"On the other hand, a cheery letter encourages him and sends him forth with a will to lick a regiment single-handed."

"Either way the effect is contagious. Despondent, the trooper is reduced to one-half efficiency. His spirit spreads to the squad, to the company. He becomes discouraged and dissatisfied with the service. Gloomy letters are responsible for more than half the desertions."

So it is that the importance of a trooper's mail is recognized by army officers far and wide, and at Chickamauga the new "bit" is set in motion. It has already gone so far that students at the officers' training camp are receiving daily epistles, even from fair ones they do not know, each carrying a little insertion of joy. The result is, general cheerfulness and firm endeavor throughout the camp.

"Write a cheerful letter to your soldier," is the slogan.

Largest Gold Dredge.

A dredge company contracted with the United States government not long ago to build flood-restraining levees on either side of the Yuba River, Cal., and to do it free of charge, the condition being that the company be allowed to dredge for gold while fulfilling its contract. Accordingly a gold dredge, costing $500,000, was built which is said to be the largest of its kind in the world. An unusual feature of the mammoth floating machine is that it has two arms, each 225 feet long, instead of one. These are provided with 44-inch belt conveyors that deposit the tailings on either bank of the stream as the dredge moves along. The digging ladder is equipped with steel buckets of 15 cubic feet capacity, which can dig to a depth of 80 feet. The hull which supports all this machinery is entirely of steel and is 165 feet long and 68 feet wide. The gold-saving tables have an area of 8,000 square feet.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Ideals Worth Striving For.

Engineers and industrial managers are glad to make needed personal sacrifices in support of their government. It is no mean call to duty. Many are now consciously or unconsciously passing through a period of thinking that can lead but to one conclusion—that there are some things more valuable than earthly existence itself. Every enlisted man, whether he realizes it or not, has that belief, and so believing, is ready for his own supreme sacrifice if it must come. Thousands of others must accept that principle of action for themselves before our industries can be made so effective as they must become to make the nation strong.—L. P. Alford, in Industrial Management.

Ready to Please.

A French lady of consequence, who had a lawsuit, came to solicit the favor of the president of the court in which the case was to be adjudicated. The magistrate, not receiving her in the way she expected, she was somewhat chagrined, and on passing into the ante-chamber, said loud enough to be heard: "Plague take that old ape!"

The next day, the lady gaining her cause, she ran directly to thank the president, who merely replied:

"Know, madame, another time, that an old ape is always ready to please a young one."

TO ASCERTAIN OCEAN'S DEPTH

Scientist Has Suggested That Method of Sound May Be Employed With Good Results.

Three-quarters of the earth's surface is submerged and has not yet been explored to any great degree. Alexander Graham Bell writes in the Youth's Companion. The only way we have of reaching the mountains and valleys at the bottom of the sea is by sending down a sounding line and bringing up a specimen of the bottom attached to the sinker. It is not easy, however, to reach the bed of the sea through a mile or two miles of water and it requires several hours to take a single sounding. It is therefore expensive both in time and in labor to ascertain the depth of the ocean.

Why not send down a sound instead and listen to the echo from the bottom? Knowing the velocity of sound in water (five times its velocity in air) and the time taken for the echo to reach the ear, we should be able to ascertain the depth of the deepest part of the ocean in a few seconds.

Here is an idea that would certainly appear to be worth trying. I have suggested it several times, but I do not know that it has ever been acted upon. The experiment might reveal not only the depth of the ocean, but something of the nature of the bottom. A flat bottom should give a single sharp return, whereas an undulating bottom should give a multiple echo, such as you hear when a pistol is fired among hills. Many important conclusions might be drawn from the facts so obtained.

FORCED RIVER BELOW GROUND

Clever Piece of Work Which Must Be Placed to the Credit of English Engineers.

A novel piece of engineering has been completed in connection with the building of an aviation field in England. The site selected was a pleasant piece of countryside, consisting of a wooded park, bisected by a little stream about 30 feet wide and 2 feet deep. This waterway is largely artificial in character. It was constructed mainly along a branch of the River Colne in 1838 and 1839, between Long Ford and Hampton Court palace, with the object of supplying the palace with ornamental fish and water ponds, and it was used for this purpose up to the present time. It is 11 miles long.

The decision to convert the park into an aerodrome made it necessary to divert this river, which, being raised above the level of the ground where it crosses the park, presented an obstacle as well as a danger. Had the river been running in a natural bed below the level of the ground, instead of in an artificial channel above the ground level, it could have been merely covered over. The need for putting it at a lower level led to the decision to carry it underground through the aerodrome by means of a re-enforced concrete inverted siphon, and this plan having been approved of, a detailed scheme was got out.—Scientific American.

Quaint Social Features Among Birds.

Interesting stories have been told of the quaint social features of bird life. The social intercourse of birds is a subject which bird lovers study with especial consideration. Man was not the first, it appears, to devise a tribunal for the trial of some one accused of crime. If the ornithologists are correct, he was at one time in medieval history far behind the feathery tribes in the system of meting out justice to wrongdoers.

Roosts hold court when one of their number is caught in theft or other misdemeanor. The culprit sits within a circle of rooks who cry out against him. He proclaims his innocence or guilt, as the case may be, by shrieking loudly. If he is considered guilty by the bird assembly, at a signal the flock pounces upon him and tears him to pieces.

Justice is not done halfway by the birds.

The rook court has been actually observed many times by bird students.

Early History of Gas.

Gas for street lighting was first used in Pall Mall, London, more than a century ago. A few experimental gas lights previously had been used in Golden Lane, but it was not until a few years later that the new form of illumination was generally adopted in London streets. The first attempt to introduce the use of gas in America was in Baltimore in 1816. The project was unsuccessful. In 1822 it was introduced in Boston, and in the following year New York streets were lighted by gas. The system did not prove successful, however, until 1827. The use of gas spread rapidly to other cities in the United States and Canada. Resin and oil were used for producing gas in America in the early days of the industry. Until half a century ago the price a thousand feet ranged up to $7, the average being about $3.50.

To Protect Birds From Cats.

The pole supporting a martin house, or any other bird house, and also the trunk of a tree in which a bird house is placed, should be protected by a cat guard, writes George Gladden, in an article on bird-house construction in the People's Home Journal. Barbed wire wound around the trunk of the tree, but held away from it by cleats about two inches thick, forms the best guard. Another simple guard may be made by tying around the support or tree trunks a number of stalks of rose bushes or any other branches with natural thorns.

EAST MAKES LITTLE CHANGE

Methods of Agriculture About Bethlehem Same Now as in the Days of Boaz.

Bethlehem is a small village lying eastward at the foot of the mountain whereon is built Bethlehem, and is what might be called its agricultural suburb. In the broad level valley beyond we see the shepherds' fields where the angels, the first Christmas eve, appeared to men in the lowliest walks of life. Here Boaz must have had his fields, for they are the only large ones near to Bethlehem suitable for raising grain, and such as would be in the possession of "a mighty man of wealth," as Boaz is depicted as being.

After threshing, the next process is to separate the wheat from the chaff. This is done by the aid of the gentle breezes that usually arise during the evening hours, no matter how warm the summer day may have been.

The tools are very simple. A two-pronged fork, converted from a single limb of an oak tree, is used to move the long straw, and with this the worker stirs the grain during the process of treading it out. For the winnowing a fork, also made of oak wood, but with five flat prongs, is used. This is the implement referred to as the "fan," of which we read in sacred story. A wooden shovel also plays its part.

In this land of no change, or at least slow change, it is quite conceivable that on and around these very threshing floors, with the same appearance of life in odden times as now, centered one of the Bible's most charming stories.—Christian Herald.

THANKSGIVING TO SUN-GOD

Pueblo Indians Have a Form of Celebration Which in a Measure Corresponds to Ours.

Each year the Pueblo Indians who inhabit the two-terraced, clay community houses which rise tier on tier to the height of five stories at Taos, N. M., celebrate the festival of San Geronimo day.

In the morning, races and dances are held; and in the afternoon, Indian clowns climb a thick pole, at the top of which hangs a dead sheep, vegetables and other food. The one fortunate enough to reach the top lowers the provisions to his companions. To climb this pole at all requires true Indian agility.

The autumn festival is not so much a tribute to San Geronimo as a thanksgiving to the bountiful sun-god for the harvest that has been plentifully supplied.

A great many tourists visit Taos and attend the picturesque ceremonies, which are held on the last day of September, says Popular Science Monthly. There is not sufficient room to shelter them in the primitive little town, so they have to travel to the adjacent town of San Fernandez de Taos, two and a half miles distant. Here the canny Mexican population stages a celebration all its own, to extract from the travelers what loose coins they have.

Get a Good Start.

"I wish I could do something to make the world a bit happier," sighed a young girl. "I'm so useless and insignificant. I don't seem to be able to do anything worth while."

The great-aunt who heard her plaint, a wise old lady with a faculty for plain speech, looked at her thoughtfully. "So you want to make the world happier?"

"Oh, I do. I want it more than anything."

"Then you're starting wrong. Just look at yourself in the mirror if you doubt it. Your face is as woe-begone as if you'd lost your last friend. Your voice just now was so doleful that it would have lowered the spirits of any passerby who had happened to hear it. There's one sure way of making the world happier and that's by being happy yourself. A smiling face and a cheerful voice are contributions we all can make to the general store of good cheer. But the world was never made happier by a whiner."

Athletics Vs. Scholarships.

No less a person than the ex-headmaster of Eton has been blowing up on the ancient superstition of the "playing fields" origin of the empire. He urges that the greatest expansion or the empire took place in times when there were no public school games (except such as were played furtively). The headmaster of Haileybury is also protesting against the excessive adulation of the athletic powers in schools. He lays the blame on the parents and I believe he is right. I know one head, a cultured man, who used to reckon the winning of a particular football match as an event, from the point of view of the school's interests, of much greater importance than many scholarships.—London Daily News.

Fishes Yawn When Bored.

Did you ever see a fish yawn? Richard Elmhirst, an English biologist, tells us that yawning is a common habit of cod, saithe, cobbler, plaice and various other kinds of fish. From his description, the piscatorial yawn is very much like the human yawn, except that it is done under water. He says: "From numerous observations I am led to think that this action of fishes is a real yawn, and serves the true physiological purpose of a yawn—that is, flushing the brain with blood during periods of sluggishness. The conditions conducive to yawning are a slight increase in temperature, and, I suppose, the accompanying diminution of oxygen."—Popular Science Monthly.

WHY ADVERTISE ONE'S WOES?

Silly Habit That Is Altogether Too Common Among Unthinking People of Both Sexes.

It is surprising to see how quickly a dark cloud can rise and completely overcast the fair, blue sky of a lovely summer day. Just as swiftly can the ill humor or ill health of one or two persons put a damper on a group of people.

We all know the woman who is constantly complaining of her chronic headache, her rheumatism, or the trouble she has with her servants; we stand in awful terror of the man who—with almost demonic glee—goes into all the gruesome details of his last operation; we groan—mentally, at least—when made to listen to the youth or maiden whose personal distresses monopolize the conversation. Each one is as welcome to an assembly of congenial souls as is the proverbial flea to the equally proverbial three-legged dog.

It is a capital idea for each of us to remember that our own experiences are rarely as interesting to others as to ourselves, unless told with the touch of an artist; and that fewer things are more difficult or more unpleasant to listen to than the recital of another's woe, particularly if that other is not a "intimate friend" in need of special advice and sympathy.

Let us keep the accounts of our grievances locked within our breasts until the tiny golden key of fitting opportunity is presented, and face the world with the countenance of a cheerful stoic and the consideration of a Sir Philip Sidney. Only thus may we be sure of creating about us an atmosphere of gentle breeding and good manners.—Elizabeth Van Rensselaer

THREE MONTHS OF DAYLIGHT

Long Period During Which There Is Practically No Time of Darkness in Finland.

During the long winters daylight in Finland lasts only three or four hours. On the shortest days it is even less. Then it is indeed a land of snow and ice. For three months it is so hot that the wealthy residents seek summer resorts for comfort. During that time it is practically one long day. Not a star to be seen, and the appearance of the first star is a sign that summer is past and the time of autumn frosts has arrived.

During my visit the evening twilight had scarcely disappeared before the morning twilight closed the doom of night again. One could read out of doors until after eleven o'clock. These long days, with scarcely any night, force vegetation to grow at a hothouse pace. Land and water have no time to cool. Summer comes in this strange land with a sudden burst of flowers, sunlight and birds.

Finland is a land of pine and fir-clad hills, for only a comparatively small portion seems to be cleared. The most of the country is fairly level, so that it has not the grandeur of the Scandinavian kingdom. In the cleared portions stand neat little wooden cottages, which are usually kept freshly painted, red being the favorite color. Surface drain ditches are made in the cultivated fields every few rods, and all seems most carefully tilled.—Nevin O. Winter, in the Christian Herald.

Gentleman of Old China.

A poor man he was, but his dignity, of bearing and manner would have done justice to a Greek philosopher or a Roman senator. And his attire was in accord with his patrician demeanor. Luther Anderson writes in Asia. He wore a gray silk gown which reached almost to his ankles and over it a short sleeveless coat of black velvet buttoned down the left side with knotted cords. The long gown concealed his trousers, excepting at the bottom, where they were neatly wrapped around his ankles and held in place by ribbonlike bands, which also covered the tops of his white stockings. His shoes were of black satin but for the soles, which were made of layers of padded cotton cloth. He wore a tight-fitting skull cap of black satin, faced with slender cords of red silk that came together at the top in a knot resembling a button. In summer he always carried a fan, which he handled in a graceful manner.

Silk-Making Butterflies.

There is a species of butterfly, native to British East Africa, that builds communal nests as big as a man's two fists. These nests, attached to branches of the trees on whose leaves the insects as caterpillars feed, are made of a good quality of silk. Inside the nest, however, are some hundreds of individual cocoons. Thus one might say that the bunch represents a whole flock of butterflies. But the important point is that the silk of the cocoons is comparable in quality to that spun by the silkworm, and claim is made that it might be utilized profitably for the weaving of fabrics, the coarser material of the nests finding industrial employment as "floss."

Heart Troubles by Wire.

Remarkable new uses for the telephone are constantly being discovered. Recently a test in London showed that it is possible to diagnose heart troubles by telephone at a distance of 100 miles. Four physicians on the Isle of Wight listened to the beating of a woman's heart in London. A stethoscope held over the heart was attached to a telephone by means of which sounds are magnified. This offers a suggestion to loving couples.—Los Angeles Times.

The Sheely Brothers Barn Wind Storm Loss

This barn, a new one, was one of the largest, the best built, the most up-to-date barn in Southern Pennsylvania, yet it did not withstand the wind storm, and the loss is thousands of dollars.

The loss is partly covered by cyclone insurance issued at Martin Winter's office.

The cost of this kind of insurance on a farm barn is $3.75 per $1000 insurance for three years (the rate on houses being lower).

The question therefore for every property owner is:

Does it pay to rise the loss of $1000 for three long years to save $3.75.

It requires less than five minutes to destroy a barn, and there are a good many five minute periods in three years.

An official photograph of the club with which the German armies "finish off" wounded soldiers. 32,000 of these were recently captured by the Italians.

The Destruction of Civilization

This is in grim reality what we are fighting this war to prevent. The club pictured above—from an actual official photograph—might be the weapon of a savage cave man of five thousand years ago. It is in fact the weapon with which German soldiers finish off the enemy wounded who have fallen on the battlefield—on the battlefield on which American boys are fighting.

There is only one answer to make to such methods the defeat of the German Armies. America has taken up the sword to give that answer. Our Army is in France to help win this war on the battlefield—that civilization may be safe, that America may be safe.

The Third Liberty Loan is your opportunity. It is the most direct blow that can be struck at German military supremacy. It is the most powerful aid that can be given our soldiers in France. It means rifles and helmets and gas masks—the best

Potato Crop Situation.

According to report of the Agriculture Department of Pennsylvania the proportion of last year's potato crop in the producers hands in Adams county is 35 per cent., or 100,000 bushels. The percentage of the State is 33 per cent., or over ten million bushels. The extremely cold winter and impassable roads are given as causes for the holding of the crop. There will have to be a speedy marketing of the crop by the growers to prevent loss.

Fair on road between Taneytown and Gettysburg. He had lived near Kingsdale, for years. In December he was residing with Samuel Weaver, who conducts the Kingsdale Store. On Dec. 8th he left the house and did not return. The deep snow fell that day and the next. Searching parties on that day and afterwards failed to find any trace of the man. The finding of the body shows that the man crawled into the shock of corn fodder for shelter and froze to death. Mr. Fair was taking fodder from the field to the barn when he made the discovery and though badly decomposed it was possible to identify the body. He was about 35 years old, unmarried, and leaves two brothers, one Samuel Coffman residing near Kingsdale.

New Styles for Spring and Summer

To be out of fashion is to be out of favor, for it is the outward indication of self-respect to be well dressed.

The little word "style" has never meant so much to a woman as it will this Spring.

We have perhaps been over-cautious in making our selections of new models in Women's Suits, Coats, Dresses, Skirts, Waists &c., in order to uphold our reputation as the Store of Correct Style.

We are very particular about the quality of the materials and workmanship in our garments, but if that is considered a fault; we are glad to be known as fault finders.

Unusual care has been given to our selections of apparel for Misses and Girls, our stocks embracing the newest thoughts from the best makers. Nothing that is not strictly in the latest fashion will be found here.

Our prices are exceptionally low, because we bought exceptionally large stocks, and therefore we are able to share with you the large savings that we made.

Even if you only care to look, we shall be glad to have you come to see our great stock.

Country and Freedom NOT SLAVES

With the world engaged in a devastating, costly war that is taking a toll of millions of lives; with our own Country in the conflict and our boys fighting to preserve the LIBERTY and FREEDOM that we have been enjoying, fighting not only for that, but to protect the honor of our women, the preservation of our homes and the safeguarding of our rights of being free men, its important that you be represented in Congress by one who has stood for the interest of the Country, with the PRESIDENT and for YOU.

Mr. Brodbeck has done that, and his experience as a Member of Congress is such that it is greatly to your interest that he be returned to Congress in order that you may have one there who knows how to meet the mighty problems that are and will come up; problems that will decide life or death to hundreds of thousands and maybe millions and the expenditure of millions of dollars.

Mr. Brodbeck, as your Representative in Congress has been on the job not one time, but all the time. He has met all issues that have come up for consideration and hasn't "ducked."

We must win this war or be SLAVES. It is up to you to help. It is unwise to "swap" horses in mid-stream.

A Fortunate Assignment

By C. W. LAMB

(Copyright, 1915, Western Newspaper Union.)

Jimmie Walker had spent his youthful life in an atmosphere whose ozone had been largely feminine; he had devoted by far the greater portion of his college days to the womanly attractions, and even after he had accepted a much-sought-after position on the Press and had commenced to realize that his education instead of being finished was only begun, had not ceased his attractions to the ladies but rather, if possible, increased them, until he met Miss Knight, tall, blonde, Miss Knight, who, he thought, would better have been called day.

It was while dining with a classmate one evening that he met her, and at first only remembered the tall girl with the blue eyes and the sweet smile, and the genial, pleasing manner; but when one day she appeared in his dingy city room with the friend's wife and asked him to give her position the strictest notice, he began to realize that Gave Him the Report.

There was something attractive in the slender face beneath those bright, wavy locks, and humbly apologized for his under appearance—he had thrown off his coat—and the belittled condition of the office.

He went to those theatricals, refusing a complimentary ticket, and watched her play the heroine with far more schoolgirl grace and bashfulness than histrionic talent, and discovered that he was envying the young man who took her in his arms and called her his own.

He danced with her after the performance, too, and vaguely felt that his six feet too better became her tall, slender figure than did the stout form of her lover in the play whose eyes rarely met hers in a direct glance.

So things drifted along. The spring was born of the winter's snows and the blossoms of summer came out of the buds and died in the autumn's blast, and the glow of the Yuletide candles gave warmth and beauty to the cold, white reflections from out of doors; and he stood beneath the mistletoe, and taking her in his arms, pressed a kiss on her lips and called her his own, and the only applause was in their hearts, for this was not play acting.

Now, Jimmie Walker had never been exactly a saint, although no one ever had called him a fast young man. He had taken life pretty much as he had found it, and had never judged men by their own comparison, but by his ideal, and had associated with them according to his personal taste. He was rather free and easy, and would sit down in the back room of the "Quiet House" and sip his beer with a brother quill driver of the Press with the same relish that he would enter into a theological discussion with his mother's pastor. Still, he was in no way loose in his morals, nor had he ever been in that enviable condition called by the city room, "full." He frankly told all this to Miss Knight, and in complete confidence, and she, in turn, promised to keep his visits to the Quiet House or similar places, and manfully kept his promise.

Jimmie was very happy in his engagement to Miss Knight and looked forward to the coming fall with great pleasure, for then he was to give his great gift to the mother of his future child, and could give his time to her and her son, where his love was to be completely and eternally devoted. A nonchalant, easy-going, and good-natured man, he was a perfect gentleman, and his only fault was that he was a little too free and easy, and that the money he received from his position in the city room was not as large as he would have liked it to be. When one day he came with the article and he was transferred to read evidence and write editorials. But it happened one forenoon in September, as he sat at his typewriter, that he caught the extracts from a story in the Press, the story of the "Quiet House" and "shipped" him on an emergency assignment to interview an actress who had just secured a divorce after a highly sensational trial, explaining as he did so that all of the city staff were out and could not be reached for the purpose.

The interview was not long, and was pleasant, for with all of his aversion to the woman, she could be very fascinating. He found her with her street wraps on, ready to go out, and after interviewing she walked downstairs with him, telling of a wine supper she was to attend that night, and as he left her at the street door and turned away, she called after him in a reckless boldness: "Come join us tonight—you'll have a good time." And Jimmie strode down the street without noticing the ladies standing in the doorway of the ladies' entrance just behind him.

That evening Jimmie spent in his den with Macaulay, and retired with a light heart and a clear conscience, for it was one day nearer to November.

The next morning as he sat among his exchanges, thinking of the call that he would make that evening, a district messenger boy came into the office, whistling the song the actress was singing, and gave him a dainty, perfumed note, which he took smilingly and gazed for some seconds at the superscription, for he knew it was from "her," and giving the boy time to get out of the way—he wished to be alone when he read her note—slowly opened and read it. The brief note said: "I am as good as dead, and as he finished and holding the open note in his hand, his eyes gazed away into vacancy, a troubled look on his face. One of the city staff strolled into the room and greeted him with:

"What's up, old man, you look blue, bad news?"

"Just thinking, that's all," but the undertone of the would-be jolly voice was such that Gregg quietly withdrew.

Bad news? Thinking! That explained it, for the little perfumed note, written on the delicate lavender-tinted paper, said:

"Having witnessed your conduct with that woman at the Normandy yesterday, I will not be at home this evening, nor hereafter."

He could not understand it. There was surely some mistake, and all that day he worked like one in a trance, scarcely knowing how the moments passed, and as soon as the paper was on the press, he closed his room and went directly to her home. There he was met by the maid, the same as usual, but she brought back his card with the message on the back: "Miss Knight is not at home to Mr. Walker." And Jimmie went back to his den and throwing himself on his couch, buried his face in his arms and shut the world from him.

About tea time that evening he was aroused by his mother's knock at the door and received from her a little packet addressed to Mr. James Walker in the well-known hand, and his mother wondered why he did not smile when he saw it, for he had told her nothing.

So the months drifted by, and the comment of his fellows was: "What's the matter with Jimmie?" but they soon became used to his changed manner and ceased to talk about it. The glorious Indian summer with its molten skies and its golden air; the joyous yuletide with its snow and evergreen; the first month of the new year with its ice and blizzards were passed, and February was bringing its searching winds when one day the "old man" came to him in a hurry and asked him to take an assignment and report the annual meeting of the Children's hospital, and it was a work in which "she" was interested. During all these weary months he had not seen her, nor had he allowed himself to inquire for her, still he knew that now he should meet her, for this was her special work. So he left his quiet exchange room and went uptown to where the neat hospital building stood in the midst of its broad lawn, looking over the broader lake.

At the entrance he met the matron and was ushered into the office while the secretary was called, and he stood pale and trembling for a moment, as in the person of the secretary he recognized Miss Knight, and he saw that she, too, was pale. For a moment only it was thus, and then his deep, calm voice broke the quiet with:

"I would like to get a report of the meeting for the Press," and her reply was equally calm.

"Certainly. Be seated, please," and he sat at the little desk while she sat at the end of it and gave him the report, and no one could guess what was beneath those calm exteriors or note the tremors that would not be heard of voice. And while reading her notes in silence for a moment she unconsciously laid her hand on the desk near him, and with the old soul in his eyes, he raised it to his lips and kissed it.

And Jimmie went back to the office that day with a bright smile on his face, and after reporting to the "old man" put in for a leave in May for a wedding trip.

There's a Difference.

The main difference between men and women is nowhere so marked as it is in the distinction between character and ability.

A man's ability is entirely separate from his character. A man may have a high and noble character and yet be a failure in every way. A woman, on the other hand, is so constituted that her ability is inseparable from her character. If a woman is a failure in any way, it is because of a lack of character, and not because of a lack of ability.

It is for this reason that we find so many women who are failures in every way, while we find so many men who are successful in every way. It is because the woman's character is so much more important than the man's, and it is because the woman's ability is so much more dependent on her character than the man's.

Therefore, when we are looking for a woman, we should look for a woman of high character, and not for a woman of high ability. For a woman of high character will be a woman of high ability, while a woman of high ability will not be a woman of high character.

Two New Oxford Boys Injured.

Two young men from New Oxford received injuries on Tuesday while working at the Hershey Chocolate Factory, Hershey, Pa. The men were employed in different departments of the factory.

John Myers, son of Mr. and Mrs. I. O. Myers, was working in the tin can department and was operating a tin shears when the middle finger of his right hand was caught in the machine and clipped off at the second joint.

Clair Reed, who makes his home with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Emanuel Reed, with several others was hauling cocoa on trucks in the building, when a wheel of his truck struck some object and came to a sudden halt, when the truck immediately following hit Mr. Reed on his right foot. At first it was thought that some bones had been broken and he was taken to the Harrisburg Hospital where an X-Ray examination proved such not to be the case.

PECULIAR FACTS ABOUT SIGHT

For One Thing, the Pupil of the Eye Adjusts Itself to the Light Surrounding It.

An observant chauffeur, passing an automobile with glaring headlights, noted that objects at the side of the road which had been distinctly visible dropped out of sight when the bright lights were thrown upon them. Since one can see better in a little light than in no light, he wondered, why can one not see better in bright light than in moderate light?

The answer is, paradoxically, that the less light there is the better one sees, for the brighter the object the less efficient is the eyesight. If, after we have been in darkness, we suddenly turn on a bright light and look at our eyes in the mirror, we can see the pupil of the eye rapidly growing smaller. If we reduce the light the pupil dilates again. What happens is the same as in the camera when we adjust the shutter to the intensity of the light.

The colored iris of the eye corresponds to the shutter. It consists chiefly of a muscle which, as the light increases, is stimulated to contract, thus drawing the curtain and shutting out some of the superfluous light. It usually takes a few seconds for this adjustment to take place. Thus when we emerge from darkness into light we are blinded until the iris can shut out some of the light from the eyes.

Queer Country House.

Lord Lucas owns the most remarkable country house in England. Its strangest feature is a queer, three-storied tower of wood and glass, but mostly glass, which rises from the main buildings.

Each story of the tower is smaller than the one beneath it, and each had its own peculiar use in the lifetime of Lord Lucas' father, the brilliant essayist, Auberon Herbert. The lowest and largest story was fitted with a carpenter's bench, at which he worked. The second story was furnished with only a table and a chair; and here he used to read and study. On the top of this story, before the third was added, there used to be a comfortable revolving chair, in which Herbert would sit for hours at a time, turning it as he wished to any point of the glorious New Forest landscape.

Publisher's Jest Costly.

An old London firm of booksellers rejoiced in a five-barreled appellation—Longman, Hurst, Rees, Orme and Brown. A book published in 1823 by this firm, recently picked up at auction in New York city, brings to memory this story: Archibald Constable, the famous publisher of Edinburgh, was fond of a joke. Mr. Longman of the above-mentioned firm once visited Constable's palatial home. During conversation he remarked: "What fine swans you have in your pond there?" "Swans?" cried Constable: "they are only geese, man. There are just five of them. If you please to observe, and their names are Longman, Hurst, Rees, Orme and Brown." This skit is said to have cost Constable a fat contract with Longman.—Outlook.

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure catarrhal deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Many cases of deafness are caused by catarrh, which is an inflamed condition of the mucous surface. Ely's Catarrh Medicine acts thru the blood on the mucous surface of the system.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any cure of Catarrh of the Ear that cannot be cured by Ely's Catarrh Medicine. Circulars free. All Druggists, 75c.
